The Eiffel Tower

The Eiffel Tower in Paris is probably the most famous tower in the world. The tower was named after its designer and constructor Gustave Eiffel. It was built for the fourth World Expo* held in Paris in 1889 in celebration of 100 years since the French Revolution. Amazingly, it was completed in just two years and two months, in time for the Expo.

At 312 meters high, the Eiffel Tower was the tallest structure in the world at the time. However, its strange appearance divided the opinions of the residents of Paris. Nevertheless, the Eiffel Tower was the star attraction of the Expo and drew visitors from all over the world.

The Expo was held again in Paris in 1900 and the Eiffel Tower again drew many visitors. But afterwards, visitors decreased and in 1909 it was decided to take it down. However, the tower was saved when it became used as a radio tower. Today, the Eiffel Tower continues to send radio and TV signals.
